THE PLODDER

Winter was freezin' and snowing. North wind was blustering strong— Life made a pretty poor showing. But the old world kept pluggin' along.

Roses once more are all glowing. The bird-lifts a summer-time song. And the world, while the soft breeze is blowing. Says, "I'm glad I kept pluggin' along."

Somewhere the roses are blowing. Though the present seems woefully wrong— And there's where we'll find we are going. If we only keep pluggin' along.
